

14 April 1978

Detroit (UPI) — CIA Director Stansfield Turner said yesterday that his agency is ready to expand intelligence activities to nonmilitary areas, providing its services to business and giving taxpayers "a better return on their investment."

Prior to speaking to the Economic Club of Detroit, Turner told reporters that the CIA is increasing its collection of economic and political information that could be of value to businessmen and other nongovernmental groups.

"We want to share what information we collect when it can be unclassified," Turner told reporters.